Will your child benefit from a social group and parent training to learn how to initiate and interact appropriately with peers?

- Do you have a child 4 to 6 years old with an Autism diagnosis?
- Would you be interested in enrolling your child in a clinic-based social group to learn to initiate and interact appropriately with typically-developing peers?
- Would you like to receive clinic-based parent training in how to host successful play dates to help your child with ASD make and keep friends?

Stanford University researchers are currently recruiting children with autism to participate in a research study of a group social skills program designed to improve peer interactions in young children with autism and their typically-developing peers.

Cost of clinic-based services varies based on individual family health insurance plans.

For more information, call Stanford University at (650) 736-1235