The Department of Psychiatry and Behavioral Sciences at Stanford University School of Medicine is seeking new full-time faculty members at the rank of Assistant, Associate, or full Professor in the Medical Center Line. These are positions for mental health clinician scientists who will be based in the Department of Psychiatry and Behavioral Sciences.

The chosen candidates will be expected to conduct scholarly research and teaching in the areas of psychiatry or psychology in adult and/or pediatric populations. Other areas of interest are public mental health and/or special patient populations. Candidates are required to have a proven track record of success in producing high-quality scholarly work, in addition to excellence in teaching and established clinical expertise in their respective field. Possible candidates could include, but are not limited to, psychiatrists, psychologists, neuropsychiatrists, and neuropsychologists.

Physician applicants must have a medical degree or equivalent degree, completed training in General Psychiatry, be board-certified in General Psychiatry, and possess or be fully eligible for a California medical license. Physicians interested in working with children must hold board certification in child psychiatry. Clinical psychologist applicants must have a doctoral degree in psychology or equivalent degree, have completed an APA-approved internship, and possess or be fully eligible for licensure as a psychologist in California.

The major criteria for appointment, reappointment and promotion for faculty in the Medical Center Line is excellence in the overall mix of clinical care, clinical teaching, scholarly activity that advances clinical medicine, and institutional service.

Stanford University is an equal opportunity employer and is committed to increasing the diversity of its faculty. It welcomes nominations of and applications from women, members of minority groups, protected veterans and individuals with disabilities, as well as from others who would bring additional dimensions to the university’s research, teaching and clinical missions.
