

Stanford Psychedelic Science Group

presents:

A Conversation with Sutton King

Sutton King, MPH

Wednesday March 3rd
12pm PST / 3pm EST / 8pm GMT

ZOOM LINK - Click to join

Bio: Sutton King, MPH, Afro-Indigenous of the Menominee and Oneida Nation of Wisconsin. She is an Indigenous Health Advocate, Researcher and Social Entrepreneur dedicated to developing and scaling innovative solutions to improve Indigenous health equity across sectors. Her focuses center decolonial approaches and culturally appropriate methodologies within technology, healthcare and business. She supports research to increase the visibility surrounding Indigenous health outcomes and access to mental health care for Urban Natives through her roles as President and Executive Director of the Urban Indigenous Collective, a grassroots organization dedicated to the health and wellbeing of Urban Natives, and Co-Founder of ShockTalk, a telebehavioral application connecting Native users to Native therapists. She is the Chief Impact Officer for Journey Colab, a biotech company decolonizing their approach to drug development, where she supports the design and implementation of a stakeholder model and ensures social impact through company accountability.

Abstract: In this presentation, Sutton King will present on her current and prior work in the biotech and non-profit sectors, operationalizing reciprocity with marginalized groups, and the Free, Prior & Informed Consent (FPIC) standard for engaging with Indigenous communities.